

Ayelet Zurer goes to the Jordan River Village

08/16/2023

■ PRIZEWINNING ISRAELI actress Ayelet Zurer, who has been living in the US for the past 20 plus years, but who has frequently returned home to act in Israeli television and movie productions, in addition to her television and movie roles in America, always makes a point of visiting Jordan River Village which is a free, medically supervised vacation village for children with chronic and life-threatening illnesses. Zurer is one of the ambassadors of the village and also a member of its board. This time she was accompanied by her son, Liad, to whom she wanted to show the good work being done at the village.

Zurer is also a presenter for BMW, which is imported to Israel by Delek Motors. This is the third consecutive year in which she has been promoting the luxury car. Before she returned to her home in Los Angeles, Zurer attended an event for women only in the Delek Motors showroom in Tel Aviv, where she participated in a panel discussion in which the focus was on women flourishing again after the age of 50. Zurer is 54. Zurer, who on this occasion spent a month in Israel, was primarily in the country for the shooting of a new television series in which she appears.

Israeli audiences best remember her as one of the lead players in the television series Shtisel, which can be seen on Netflix, 10 years after it first hit the small screen in Israel.